Atkinson's Saturday Evening Post

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER, DEVOTED TO LITERATURE, MORALITY, SCIENCE, NEWS, AGRICULTURE AND ART.

Bulletin, No. 217. PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 26, 1853. Vol. [illegible]

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING,
By Samuel Couth [illegible]
NO. 98 CARTER'S ALLEY,
Third door below Third street, north side.

TERMS—[illegible]

For the Saturday Evening Post.

WHERE IS OUR GOD?

Isaiah, Chap. xlv.

BY THE REV. JOHN STRAIN.

"This is our God!" most high,
For whom we have waited long;
He rules above the sky,
The church hath sung;
And gladly joined in heart and voice,
In His salvation we rejoice.

Him we exulting praise,
Whose counsels are of old;
Glorious in all his ways,
His wonders we behold;
The exhaustless source of perfect bliss,
The God of truth and righteousness.

A people fierce and strong,
From their defenced abode,
With severe, harmonious song,
Shall glorify our God;
The contrite walk shall hear,
And distant when their Lord shall have.

His strength alone sustains
The meekly in distress;
Truly refuge firm remains
When storms conflicting press;
His outspread chadowing shoot is made
In summer's sultry heat a shade.

Where plays the mountain breeze
God doth a tent prepare,
Of verdure spread the trees,
And things related cool rare;
Where, beckoning to the Almighty's call,
Assembled meet the nations all.

God doth the veil remove,
Over all the nations spread,
And from the realms of love
Refulgent glories shed;
From clime to clime extends his sway,
And moves his saints' reproach away.

To worlds unseen do we
Extend a blissful hope;
Where death in victory
Shall soon be swallowed up;
Where pain, nor mind, nor terms decay,
Where God will wipe all tears away.

In that auspicious day,
Enshrined on his throne,
The renowned all shall say,
"This is our God alone!"
And those who have waited, Lord, for thee,
With joy shall thy salvation see.

SKETCHES OF THE LAW.

One of the most useful volumes to the general reader, and in fact to all classes of citizens, is the Catechism of American Law, recently published in this city, and for sale by most booksellers throughout the country. It contains in the compass of about two hundred and fifty pages, a brief abstract of the existing law on no less than seventy different subjects, embracing the various topics which occur most frequently in the ordinary business of life. Chancellor Kent of Maryland, and Chief Justice Marshall, unite in recommending it as a correct synopsis of American Law. No higher authority in its favor could be given. To give our readers an idea of the manner in which the author has executed his task, we select the article on the Law of Marriage.

QUESTION.—Who are incapable of contracting matrimony.

ANSWER.—All persons who have not sufficient use of the understanding, to deal with discretion in the common affairs of life, as idiots, and lunatics, (except in their lucid intervals,) are incapable of agreeing to any contract, and of course to that of marriage.

Q. Is marriage with an idiot or lunatic absolutely void?

A. Yes: but though no sentence of avoidance is absolutely necessary, yet as well for the sake of the good order of society, as of the peace of mind of all concerned, it is expedient that the nullity of the marriage should be ascertained by the decree of the court of ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

Q. Is marriage procured by force or fraud absolutely void?

A. Yes: but is equally proper in this case, as in those of idiocy or lunacy, that the fraud or violence should be judicially investigated.

Q. Would intentional misrepresentation vitiate the contract?

A. Misrepresentation however disingenuous, of the qualities of one of the contracting parties, as to condition, rank, fortune, manners or character, would be insufficient. The law makes no provision for the relief of a blind credulity, however it may have been produced.

Q. At what age may persons bind themselves in marriage?

A. The age of consent to a matrimonial contract is fixed by laws, in fourteen in males, and twelve in females.

Q. Is marriage contracted before that age voidable?

A. Marriage before that age is voidable at the election of either party, on arriving at the age of consent.

Q. Can a person marry while a former husband or wife is living?

A. Such a second marriage is absolutely null and void, and is declared a criminal offence, in most if not all the States of the Union.

Q. Are marriages between near relations by blood or marriage lawful?

A. The law declares all marriages within the levitical degrees to be void.

Q. May minors marry without the consent of parents, or guardians?

A. The law in this country does not require the consent of parents or guardians, but leaves the formation of the marriage contract, as in few churches, as in any part of the civilized world.

Q. Are there any peculiar ceremonies necessary, to the valid celebration of a marriage?

A. The consent of the parties is all that is required. The presence of the clergyman is not essential to the validity of a marriage, the consent of the parties may be declared before a magistrate, or simply before witnesses.

Q. How is a marriage dissolved?

A. When a marriage is duly made, it becomes of perpetual obligation, not to be renounced at the pleasure of either or both of the parties. It can only be dissolved by the death of one of the parties, or by divorce.

Q. What are the two kinds of divorces?

A. Divorce from the bonds of matrimony which is total, and divorce from bed and board, which is only partial.

Q. What disabilities existing in the parties, render a marriage voidable?

A. The canonical disabilities, such as consanguinity, affinity, and corporeal infirmity existing prior to the marriage; but in these cases it is valid, for all civil purposes, unless sentence of nullity be declared in the lifetime of the parties.

Q. For what causes will be law declare a marriage originally void?

A. For civil disabilities, such as a prior marriage, want of age or idiocy, which make the contract void ab initio, and the union meretricious.

Q. For what causes subsequent to the marriage, give divorce from the bonds of matrimony granted?

A. The policy of the different states is exceedingly various on this subject. In some no divorce can be granted, save by a special act of the Legislature. In others, the courts are allowed to grant divorces from the bonds of matrimony for adultery. In a few the jurisdiction of the courts, as to absolute divorces, for causes subsequent to the marriage, is confined to the male case of adultery, and in others, incurable illness, or wilful desertion, or unheard of absence, or some of them, authorize divorces from the bonds of matrimony, under different modifications and restrictions.

Q. In what cases will the law decree a separation, from bed and board?

A. In most of the states, the courts have the power of allowing divorces from bed and board, founded on the complaint of the wife, of cruel and inhuman treatment, of such conduct as renders it unsafe for her to live with her husband, and be under his control, or of wilful desertion of her, and refusal or neglect to provide for her.

Q. After the parties are thus separated, is the husband bound to maintain his wife?

A. The courts exercise the power of making suitable provision for the maintenance of the wife and children, out of the husband's means.

As connected with this subject, we also subjoin the Rights of Husband and Wife.

Q. What are the legal effects of marriage?

A. The law regards husband and wife, as one person, and upon this principle, depend almost all the legal rights, and duties, and disabilities, that either of them can by the marriage.

Q. Can the wife own in her own name?

A. If she be in possession of any property, or property, which is subject to her control, without her husband's interference, and in his name as well as her own, she be good evidence of such ownership the husband, but in no other case. But in equitable proceedings, the wife may be interested and protected in property.

Q. Can husband and wife mutually compact with each other?

A. The common law no made no mention of them, and in the recognition of marriage, the law is wrapped in the mantle of personification of the husband, and therefore, the husband and wife cannot contract with each other, prior to the marriage.

Q. Can the husband maintain trespass against his wife?

A. The husband cannot maintain trespass against his wife, nor can the wife maintain trespass against her husband, though she may recover her dower in his property.

Q. Has the husband dower in his wife?

A. Yes: for his wife is not to take after her death, and by the common law of women, he may enjoy lands upon her during his life.

Q. What right does the husband acquire by marriage in the property of his wife?

A. The general rule is, that the husband becomes entitled to all the goods and chattels, personal property of the wife, and to the rents and profits of her lands, and he becomes liable to pay her debts, and performs the covenants.

Q. Upon the death of the wife before her husband, do he takes the property acquired in her own name?

A. Yes: or he will be

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

ATKINSON'S SATURDAY EVENING POST.

PHILADELPHIA:

Saturday, Novemb'r 30, 1833.

REMOVAL.

The Printing and Publication Office of this paper is now removed to No. 36 Carter's Alley, 2d door below 3d st. between Chestnut and Walnut.

THE NEWS.

We have devoted a large space in this paper to the items of foreign news, furnished by our New York papers of Tuesday last. The London dates received, are to the 23d, and the Liverpool to the 24th, both inclusive. It will be seen that the death of the King of Spain has been followed by a serious commotion in that kingdom, and that Ferdinand's brother, Don Carlos, intends making a vigorous push for the throne. Affairs in Portugal are still undecided. The report of General Bourmont, Lalochejaquelin, and several other French officers, having left the service of Don Miguel, appears to have been correct. They are stated to have arrived in Spain, (probably in company with Don Carlos) and by the last accounts were performing quarantine at a small town in Estramadura. Orders had been transmitted from Madrid that on the expiration of the quarantine they should be conducted to Cadiz, and sent out of the country.

Captain Ross, commander of the Arctic Expedition, has returned to England. The details of his expedition and adventures, which we have copied, will be found to possess deep interest. An expedition is now about being sent in pursuit of Capt. Back, who, it will be remembered, started, not long since, in search of Captain Ross.

TRIAL OF THE MANSONS.

The trial of Robert Manson, Froman Manson, (his son) and Joseph B. Strafford, (his son-in-law) for a CONSPIRACY AND ASSAULT AND BATTERY, with intent to Murder, was commenced on Monday, November 18, 1833, and was terminated on Tuesday last, by a verdict NOT GUILTY against the MANSONS, and Stafford guilty on second and third counts.

On the 14th November, the Defendants' counsel moved that a separate trial should be granted to each, and laid before the Court, affidavits of material testimony of the wives of two of the defendants. After hearing the arguments pro and con, the Court held the matter under advisement until the 18th, when the opinion was ably delivered by the presiding Judge (KING), overruling the application; he stated that every precedent which could be found, had been carefully examined, and if any doubts had remained in the minds of the Court, their doubts would have been cast for the defendants; but the offence of conspiracy was of a joint nature, and even if separate trials were awarded, the wives could not be examined at all, for if the testimony of the wife would acquit two defendants, her husband must, consequently, be discharged, as at least two must be convicted of conspiracy; that the granting of separate trials was a matter purely in the discretion of the Court, depending upon the circumstances of the given case; that as the only ground of the present application, was that the testimony of the wives might respectively be adduced, as that could not be permitted, even on separate trials, the application must be refused and the trial proceed jointly against all the defendants.

The Sheriff then proceeded to call the Jurors, who were respectively asked "if they had formed or expressed an opinion on the matter," and after several challenges for cause and peremptorily, by the Commonwealth and the Defendants, the Jury-box was, at half past eleven o'clock, filled as follows:—

Jacob Reed,	James Howell,
Thomas Black,	Joseph Montgomery,
George Rehn,	John Carpenter,
John D. Hugh,	Jeremiah Willets,
Philip Lowrey,	Leonard Jewell,
Jacob Copas,	Benjamin Davis.

The case then proceeded, and fifty witnesses were examined, twenty-five on each side: each witness was interrogated in the issue, and an abridged report of the case could not be given, without injustice to either side. The charge was made by Thomas S. Hart, of Boston, that on the night of the 18th of July last, about 11 o'clock, near Gifford's Run, above Smithville, he was attacked by three men, who, he declared, were the three defendants; and after being wounded and beaten, was left for dead, until he was found the next day in a state of insensibility, from which he recovered at about two o'clock in the afternoon.

On the other hand, it was alleged, that no attack was made on Mr. Hart, and that even if an attack were made, the defendants were elsewhere at the time and a variety of evidences adduced to support the positions respectively assumed by the prosecution and defence. The case was skillfully, eloquently and zealously argued by the counsel, and Judge King delivered very short charge to the jury, merely informing what was the offence and its nature, leaving the facts for the free determination of the jury, briefly recapitulating the grounds of prosecution and defence, and after twenty-four hours deliberation by the jury, two defendants were acquitted, and the third convicted. Thus terminated a case, which has created an excitement and interest, unparalleled in the annals of Philadelphia jurisprudence, and the whole affair from its commencement, has presented an entangible mystery, which even the beams of justice has failed to penetrate, and the only anticipation of the truth ever being known, must arise from the stings of remorse or death-bed confessions, rare occurrences in this age of civilization.

The whole case will, we learn, shortly be presented to the public in a pamphlet.

With this case ended the term of the Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Jail Delivery for the county of Philadelphia.

This is the highest criminal court, established by the Constitution and Laws of Pennsylvania, having an exclusive jurisdiction of the higher class of crimes—such as murder, rape, arson, robberies, burglaries, &c. Its jurisdiction, concurrent with the inferior courts, of all other minor offences, is fixed by the constitution of the state, to be holden at least once a year in every county of the state, and a concurrent power to hold it, is given to any two justices of the Supreme Court and to the President and one Associate of the Court of Common Pleas; but it has always been the custom to hold two sessions a year; the November Sessions by the Justices of the Supreme Court, and the May Sessions by the President and an Associate Judge of Court of Common Pleas; but within the last two years, the Justices of the Supreme Court have not held any session, leaving it to the President and Associate Judge of the Common Pleas to hold both sessions, and it is a fact worthy of remark, that during the last two or three years, the records of this court exhibit an increase, rather than a diminution of crime.

At the past term, four indictments for Murders, besides several for robbery, arson, burglary and two for assaults and batteries, with intent to kill, have been disposed of. The court was holden by Judge KING, who, during his very few years of judicial existence, has acquired a rich judicial reputation and distinction for industry, research, integrity and legal acumen. To Mr. Dallas, Attorney General, also much credit is due for the promptitude with which the public business was done, with, at the same time, a due and deliberate regard for the interests of parties and rights of the commonwealth.

RECEPTION OF MR. CLAY.

Mr. Clay reached this city, on his way to Washington, on Saturday afternoon, accompanied by Mrs. Clay, two grand children, and Miss Southard, daughter of Judge Southard, of New Jersey, at whose house Mr. Clay stopped while in Trenton. He was brought from Bristol in the steamboat William Penn, engaged for the special purpose, which left the city in the morning, with about eighty gentlemen, composing the committee of arrangement, and others. Upon leaving Bristol, the company sat down to a sumptuous entertainment, at which David Paul Brown, Esq. presided, assisted by Messrs. Henry White, Benj. Nagle, Cornelius Tiers, and Henry Remmey, jr. The greatest hilarity and good feeling prevailed, and after removing the cloth, a number of toasts were offered and drank. That complimentary to Mr. Clay, elicited a neat and appropriate speech, delivered in the distinguished orator's usual happy manner. Speeches were also offered by Messrs. D. P. Brown and H. Spackman, and several songs contributed much to the animation of the guests.

The arrival of the boat at Kensington, was announced by cheering from an immense concourse of citizens, who crowded all the adjacent spaces. Mr. Clay was conducted ashore by the Hon. John Sergeant, and John Swift, Mayor of the city, and seated in a barouche drawn by four cream coloured horses. The van of the escort consisted of from fifty to a hundred citizens mounted on grey horses, and led by the chief marshal, Geo. W. Jones, Esq. After Mr. Clay, the committee of arrangement followed, in barouches, and next the main body of the escort, consisting of several hundred horsemen. The streets through which the procession passed, were lined with spectators, and the windows along the route presented an imposing array of beauty and fashion. In front of the United States Hotel, on the arrival of the procession, the space was completely blocked up with citizens, anxious to get a glimpse of the distinguished son of Kentucky.

The whole arrangements were conducted with admirable propriety and skill; and those having charge of the cavalcade and the procession, deserve great credit for their good taste and attention.

The Kensington Bank, of the county of Philadelphia, have just made a new emission of Five Dollar bills, from a plate engraved by those ingenious and superior artists, Messrs. Draper, Underwood, Bald and Spencer. The plate contains a number of beautiful embellishments. The centre piece gives a view of the wharves and docks at Kensington, and of the various operations of ship building, repairing, &c., with the city in the distance. Adjoining, on either side, are two heads, of ancient character, and on the ends, a portrait of a female. The whole design is neat and elegant, and so skilful is the work of the artists, that the labours of the counterfeiter may fairly be set at defiance. The firm alluded to, deserve lasting credit for their efforts to thwart the operations of cunning rogues and cheats. They have brought the science of note engraving to an unparalleled degree of perfection.

A cellar, in Water street near Spruce, was entered by a watchman, on Thursday evening, at the instance of a person who alleged he had been robbed in that place, a short time previous. The officer found the floor strewn over with straw beds, upon which a number of vagrants were reposing. The cellar was ascertained to be a regular lodging place for a number of wharf-rats, who, for the privilege, pay the proprietor six and a quarter cents per night. They were arrested and committed to jail, under the vagrant act.

We take the following from the St. Francisville (La.) Phœnix, of Nov. 2d:—

"ANOTHER STEAM BOAT BURNT.—We stop the press, to announce the loss, by fire, of the Steam-boat Caspian. She was burnt near the mouth of Red river, and we are informed that between 20 and 30 souls perished in the flames. Particulars not yet received.

A distressing case of Hydrophobia lately occurred near Muncy, Pa. as we learn by the Telegraph of that place. Mr. Evan Paulhamus, who was bitten by a rabid dog, some weeks ago, expired on Wednesday last, having suffered intense agony from hydrophobia, from the Monday before. On Monday morning at breakfast, on putting a cup of coffee to his lips, he was observed to shudder and to put it down untasted; he directed his wife to remove the children from the room, and in a short time after, the paroxysms came upon him, and continued with little intermission until he died.

HORRIBLE ASSASSINATION.—The New Orleans Bee of Nov. 15th has the following:—

Mr. Delphin Villere, the son of the late lamented governor of that name, was assassinated on his plantation on Monday evening; it is said that the crime was perpetrated by Mr. Descoteaux, jr., and that he has made his escape. Warrants have been issued, and we do hope that the officers charged with their execution will do all in their power to bring the murderer to justice. The crime of cold blooded and atrocious murders have become so frequent, of late that offenders should be punished with the utmost rigor of the law.

From the Ballston Spa Gazette.

AWFUL MURDER.

On Thursday morning last, a black fellow calling himself John Wadkins, who came to our village about two months since—and after a few weeks, opened a barber's shop. On the morning of the day above mentioned, he deliberately stabbed and killed one of our citizens named Aaron Case.

The facts attending this horrid affair are as follows: Early on that morning this black fellow called at the tavern of Mr. Ladow, to take his "morning dram," as was his custom—and after he had drank two glasses—he being somewhat sleepy, without permission went into the baggage room to lay down: the boy who tended the bar, (Mr. L. being absent from home) requested Mr. Case and some other person to take him out of the room, as he did not want a drunken negro there: accordingly they took the fellow by the arm and carefully led him to the door,—in doing which, the black fellow struck Mr. Case in the face with his fist. Mr. C. then left the house, and the black fellow in close pursuit, took a knife from his pocket, opened it, and as Mr. Case was stepping from the stoop to the ground, stabbed him in the breast, the knife entering the main artery. Mr. C. went a few feet further, and, placing both hands to his breast, exclaimed, "Oh, God, he has stabbed me, and I shall die." He was then led into the tavern, placed on a chair—and in a few moments his soul was in eternity. The murderer fled, uttering oaths and imprecations against his victim—but was soon after overtaken, seized and bound fast, and conveyed to the prison, where, we trust, he will securely remain until the sitting of the Court, which takes place on Tuesday next.

A jury of inquest was called to sit on the body of the deceased—who, after a patient investigation—the facts of his guilt being almost as clear as the sun at noon day,—rendered a verdict of Wilful Murder, by a person calling himself John Wadkins.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 4.—The new packet ship Yazoo, Capt. Packard, arrived last evening, in the short passage of 9 days from New York to the Balize. We learn that there has been a mutiny on board the ship Pontiff, between the steerage passengers and the captain and crew. The revenue cutter was running down to the assistance of the vessel at the time the tow boat left.

It has rained at last; and the desire of our whole population, hourly expressed and reiterated, is at length gratified: the Levee has commenced again to exhibit its usual bustle and activity—strangers are arriving from every quarter—and another great commercial campaign is about to open. That every thing wears an appearance favorable to business, is the general remark; and we doubt not that the present season will far exceed, in commercial importance, any thing that has preceded it. The Mississippi is at low water mark.

A French mechanic, named Peter Eagle, lost his life, a few days since, in a factory, near Paterson, N. J. He was a file cutter, and employed water power. While engaged in repairing some part of his machinery, he was caught in a belt, and drawn to the ceiling. His left arm passed between the drum and the floor through a space about two inches wide, his neck was broken by the draught of the belt upon his arm, and passed his head to his right side, cutting it considerably.

LITERARY NOTICES.

The Book of my Lady—Messrs. Key & Biddle have just published a volume of over 300 pp. under the above singular title. It comprises a melange of articles in poetry and prose, some of which are strongly sketched, and evidence the ability of an able writer. The articles in prose are decidedly the most attractive, particularly that of Chetsford, which the reader will find deeply interesting. The book will commend itself as a pleasing companion to the lovers of light reading.

We have been favoured with a copy of an address delivered before the Philanthropic and Dialectic Societies, of Chapel Hill, N. C., in June last, by the Hon. George E. Badger. It is an able production, distinguished no less by classic knowledge, and an intimate acquaintance with human nature, than by eloquent and sound precepts.

Messrs. Carey, Lea & Blanchard have re-published a work under the title of "Lights and Shadows of German Life." It comprises a series of tales and stories under the following heads. The Military Campaigns of a man of peace,—abounding in laughable incidents—the Fugitive of Saxe; the Red Coat of Prague; Black Frier; Old Stanzy; the Rival Pearls; Circumstantial Evidence; the White Grey Hound; and the Magic of Time. All the stories possess deep interest, and though not developing the genius of a Scott they will repay with gratification the time spent in the perusal.

MECHANISM OF THE HAND.

We have before us, from the press of Carey, Lea and Blanchard, the fourth number of the Bridgewater Treatises. It embraces an essay on the hand, its mechanism and vital endowments as evincing design in the Creator. The object of these treatises, it will be remembered, is to demonstrate the power, wisdom and goodness of God, as manifested in the creation. The present number, forms a deeply interesting volume on the anatomy of the hand, the muscles of the arm, the substitution of other organs for the hand, its sensibility, its muscular and mechanical powers, &c. The author—Sir Charles Bell,—appears to be intimately acquainted with the subject, and he has brought to light, in the elucidation of his text, many important facts connected with anatomy and natural history. The work is one that cannot be attentively read without advantage to the intellect, and profit to the mind.

We have margined several pages as affording paragraphs suitable for extracts, but have room, at this time, for the following only:—

After having examined the manner in which one instrument, the hand, is modified and adapted to a variety of purposes in different animals, there remains only this mode of elucidation—that we contrast it with its imperfect substitutes in other creatures. I might, indeed, have shewn in the insect tribes the most curious examples of instruments for similar purposes with the hand and fingers of man; but I have intentionally confined this inquiry to the higher classes of animals.

The habits of some fishes require that they should cling firmly to the rocks or to whatever presents to them. Their locomotive powers are perfect; but how are they to become stationary in the tide or the stream? I have often thought it wonderful that the salmon or the trout, for example, should keep its place, night and day, in the rapid current. In the sea, there are some fishes especially provided with means of clinging to the rocks. The lumpfish, cyclopterus lumpus, fastens itself by an apparatus which is on the lower part of its body. The sucking fish, remora, has a similar provision on its back. It attaches itself to the surface of the shark and to whatever is afloat; and, of course, to the bottoms of ships. The ancients believed it capable of stopping a ship under sale, and Pliny, therefore, called it remora. We must admire the means by which these fishes retain their proper position in the water, without clinging by their fins or teeth, and while they are free for such efforts as enable them to seize their food. The apparatus by which they attach themselves resembles a boy's sucker: the organ being pressed against the surface to which the creature is to be fixed, the centre is drawn by muscles in the same manner that the sucker is drawn with the cord, and thus a vacuum is made.

In the cuttle-fish we see a modification of this apparatus: the suckers are on the extremities of their processes or arms, and become instruments of prehension and of locomotion. They are capable of turning in all directions, either to fix the animal or to drag it from place to place. In the Indian Seas, these creatures become truly terrific from the length of their arms, which extend to eight or nine fathoms, and from the firmness with which they cling.

Dr. Shaw tells us, that on throwing a fish of the species cyclopterus lumpus into a pail of water, it fixed itself so firmly to the bottom, that by taking hold of the tail, he lifted up the pail, although it contained some gallons of water.

* * * * * * * * *

That insects have the most exquisite organs of sense must be allowed: but we do not reflect on the extraordinary accuracy with which they measure distance; which is an adaptation of the muscular exertion to the sense of vision. The spider which I have already alluded to in the former chapter—the aranea scenica, when about to leap, elevates itself upon its fore legs, and lifting its head, seems to survey the spot before it jumps. When this insect spies a small gnat or fly upon the wall, it creeps very gently towards it, by short steps, till it comes within a proper distance, and then it springs suddenly like a tiger. It will jump two feet to seize upon a bee.

We have a more curious instance of the precision of eye and the adaptation of muscular action in the chameleon vulgaris. This fish inhabits the sea, rivers, and lives on the smaller aquatic flies. When it observes a fly alighted on a twig or flying near (for it can shoot them on the wing) it darts a drop of water with so steady an aim as to bring the fly down into the water, when it falls an easy prey. These fishes are kept in large vases for ornament, and if a fly be presented on the end of a twig, they will shoot at it with surprising accuracy. In its natural state it will hit a fly at the distance of from three to six feet. The rana viridistar has also the power of forming its mouth into a tube and squirting at flies so as to encumber their wings and bring them to the surface of the water. Whether led to admire the wonderful power of instinct in these inferior creatures, or the property acquired by our own eye, we must acknowledge a compound operation.

Book of Nature for December.

The December number of the Book of Nature was published in the early part of the present week, and sustains the high character given by its editors to the preceding numbers. It contains ten fine quarto copperplate engravings; two of Quadrupeds, two of Ichthyology, two of Entomology, one of Conchology, one of Geology, and two of Ornithology, one of which, containing six birds of various species, is finely coloured by skilful artists from nature itself. The plate of Geology is designed to illustrate several interesting phenomena of basaltic rocks, and of mineral veins; the plates are accompanied by scientific descriptions, prepared with brevity, but intelligible to the most uninformed reader, and enlivened with sprightly and interesting anecdotes of the habits and peculiarities of the subjects they explain. Speaking of the Abez Goat, the editor says—

This animal is distinguished by large knotted horns, reclining backwards; a small head; large eyes; a thick, short, strong body; strong legs; very short hoofs; and a short tail. Its body is of a deep brown colour, with a mixture of hoary hairs; its belly is of a tawny white; its legs partly black, partly white; the space under the tail, in some individuals, is tawny, and others white. The hair is harsh, and the male is furnished with a beard. These animals are seldom found, except in the most precipitous and inaccessible heights of lofty mountains, where they assemble in flocks, sometimes consisting of ten or fifteen individuals. During the night, they feed in the highest wilds, but, at sunrise, they again ascend the mountains, till they have reached the most perilous heights. They are remarkably swift, and display amazing agility and dexterity in leaping. They are objects of the chase, but, from the inaccessible nature of the places to which they generally resort, their dexterity in leaping, and the danger attendant on the pursuit of them, the Ibex hunter must have a hand that can bear to look down from the most tremendous precipices without terror, address and sure footedness in the most difficult passes, and also much strength, vigour, and activity. Another danger attendant on this chase is, that the Ibex, when close pressed, will sometimes turn on his pursuer, and tumble him down the precipices, unless he has time to lie down, and permit the animal to pass over him. The Ibex will mount an almost perpendicular rock of fifteen feet, at three successive bounds, appearing merely to touch it, to be repelled, like an elastic substance striking against a hard body. The fore legs being considerably shorter than the hinder, enables these animals to ascend with more facility than to descend; and hence, when pursued, they always attempt to gain the summits of the mountains. They inhabit the chain of mountains extending from mount Taurus, between eastern Tartary and Siberia. In Europe, they are found on the Carpathian and Pyrenean chains, and in the Grisons and other parts of the Alps. The season for hunting them is during August and September, when they are usually in good condition. The old males haunt more elevated spots than the females and the younger animals. Their voice is a sharp, short whistle, not unlike that of the chamois, but of shorter duration; sometimes, and especially when irritated, they make a snorting noise. The female seldom has more than one young one at a time: to this she pays great attention, defending it with courage and obstinacy. As to the stories of their throwing themselves down the steepest precipices, and contriving to fall on their horns, when closely pursued, or hanging by these appendages over gulfs by a projecting rock till the danger be passed, we must confess that they appear to us very problematical.

Of the affectionate regard for her offspring displayed by the Angora Goat, we have the following:—

The devices used by the goat to protect the young from the fox, are very remarkable. She generally discovers his approach while yet at a great distance, and, [illegible] the young to a [illegible] place, and [illegible] herself [illegible] the fox, [illegible] the young [illegible] herself [illegible] the fox [illegible] the young [illegible] herself [illegible] the young [illegible] herself [illegible] the young [illegible] herself

Any word is now taken for a key: Paris, for example. This is a short word, and, for the sake of secrecy, it would be well to choose for the key some one or more words less striking. Suppose we wish to write in this cypher, with this key, the phrase "We lost a limb;" we commence write Paris over the phrase, repeating it as often as it is necessary, thus:

Paris Paris Par
We lost a limb it is

We now take, as a cypher for w, the letter which we find in the square opposite w, in the left marginal column, and under p on the top, which is m. Instead of e, we take the letter opposite e, and under a, which, as f; for l, the letter opposite l, and under r, and so on.

Proceeding thus, we should obtain the following sense of letters: m f e a l i b t k s i m w

The person who receives the epistle, writes the key over the letters; as, Paris Paris Par
m f e a l i b t k s i m w

He now goes down in the perpendicular line, at the top of which is p, until he meets m, opposite to which, in the left marginal column, he finds w. Next, going in the line of a, down to r, he finds on the left e. In the same way, r gives l, l gives a, and so on. Or you may reverse the process: begin with p, in the left marginal column, and look along horizontally till you find m, over which, in the top line, you will find w. It is easily seen that the same letter is not always designated by the same cypher; thus e and a occur twice in the phrase selected, and they are designated respectively by the cyphers f and w, k and b. Thus the possibility of finding out the secret writing is almost excluded. The key may be changed from time to time, and a different key may be used with each correspondent. The utmost secrecy is necessary, because one character, accidentally omitted, changes the whole cypher. The correspondent, however, may ascertain this with comparatively trouble.—British Cyclopædia.

CHAPTER OF MISSES.

The dear little Misses we meet with in life,
What hopes and what fears they awaken;
And when a man's taking a Miss for his Wife,
He is Missed as well as Mis-take-ben.
When I courted a Miss Aid and obtained the kiss,
I thought in the warmth of my passion,
That I'd make a great Mis in thus gaining a Miss,
But 'twas only a Miss-calculation.

For me many Misses surrounded Miss Kid,
With me and my love interfering;
A jealous Miss-trust put a into her head
That she ought not to give me a hearing.
There's a certain Miss-chance that I met with one day
Almost sent my hopes to destruction,
And she left a succession of all I might say—
And all owing to one Miss-construction.

Discovered by a Miss-information I wrote,
The cause of her anger demanding;
Miss-direction prevented her getting the note,
And introduced Miss-understanding.
When to make her my wife I earnestly swore,
Miss-belief made her doubt my intention,
And I nearly got wed to Miss-fortune before
I could wean her from Miss-apprehension.

But when she no longer would yield to Miss-doubt,
Nor be led by Miss-representation,
She had with Miss-life a most serious fall out,
And to wed felt no more hesitation.
But when at the church to be married we met
Miss-judge made the Parson to tarry,
And I got so annoyed by an awkward Miss-fit,
I could not get the ring on her finger.

Having been so Miss-used, I now keep a strict watch,
The I still live in fear of Miss-carriage,
And I found, when too late, an unlucky Miss-match,
Interfered with the joys of my marriage.
Miss-rule in my dwelling put every thing wrong
The Miss-ard perpetual then to her season,
Till my case, like the time I take singing my song,
Was all wasted by Miss-application.

VARIETY OF MODES.

"In the whole course of my reading," says a celebrated writer, "which has been extensive and desultory, I do not recollect having ever met with an essay on the science of scolding; yet that it is reduced to a perfect system, and that the practice of it has long been a ruling passion with the fairer part of the creation, few seem will deny. There is as much harmony, measure, and variety speaking, in the boisterous pipes of a regular-bred, out-and-out scold, as in the astonishing exclamations of Mrs. Wood, or the melting supplications of Braham; indeed, even the most celebrated and experienced physicians assert, that it is of the most essential benefit in many cases, which I would attempt to divide into the following classes, viz.:

"First.—The constitutional scold, who practises for the benefit of her health.

"Second.—The beautiful scold, who is put out of temper, because she cannot bring her complexion to its usual pitch of perfection, even with the aid of the captivating cradle.

"Third.—The authoritative scold, who discharges her spleen to support her dignity, and will not permit the least infringement on the prerogative of the petticoat.

"Fourth.—The matrimonial scold, who reads curtain lectures for the information of her husband's morals, recommended to the very ancient and numerous family of the Ben-pecks.

"Fifth.—The dramatic scold, alias stage shrew, who endeavours to convince the world that she can rant off the stage as well as on it.

"Sixth.—The patriotic scold, who vociferates for the good of her country, to display her great knowledge and party principles.

"Seventh.—The unfeminine scold, who, by forming a cordial alliance with certain strong liquors, is wrought up to a frenzy, in which state strikingly evinces the ardent dispositions of a woman of spirit.

"Eighth.—The common scold, though last, not least in fame, who may with the utmost propriety be styled a professional scold, possessed of a volume of voice, combining vast compass and exhausted strength especially in the quiet notes. She is so well established, and in the ancient art, mystery and province of scolding, that all others modestly submit, and have her the undisputed heroine of the field of tongue."

A Tender Boy.—In one of the wild mountain paths we suddenly fell in with a Turkish youth, about sixteen years old, mounted on a spirited Arab ass, and pouting forth a song with all the light-heartedness of a schoolboy. Upon seeing us, his hand was instantly upon his dagger; but after a moment's pause, he approached, threw himself from his horse, and addressed us with all the ease and self possession of a well bred gentleman. His dress, exterior, prepossessing; and although his legs were bare, and I can compare tanned yellow, yet the almost feminine delicacy of his complexion and the richness of his dress, induced us to suppose he was the son of some chief of consideration in the country. His curiosity was much excited when he learned we were Americans, and his questions evinced more judgment than could have been expected from one of his age. Who was our pashe, and what was our religion? what use did we make of all the opium we carried away from Turkey? and a number of other questions were uttered with the volubility of a Greek, rather than with the dull gravity with which we are accustomed to consider as characteristic of the Turk. We parted with many expressions of good will on our side, which he returned with the most graceful gestures and acknowledgments.

The Fiery Ready.—Of course, a fat, comely, cheerful looking schoolmaster, of the county Kildare, was the first relief executed for high treason. The sentence was that he should be hanged by the neck, but not till he was dead; that while he was still alive his bowels should be taken out, his body quartered, &c. The culprit bore all this with firm, though mild composure; and on the conclusion of the sentence howed low, thanked the Judge for his impartiality, and, turning about said "Gentlemen, I'm ready!" "Do well if so am I!" "Why," said he, "I was afraid his Lordship would order me to be flayed!" Every rebel preferred death to the cat-of-nine-tails! Of honesty hand-writing years on the top of Nose-gay.—Sir J. and Barrington's Personal Sketches and Memoirs.

Tender-ness.—In the direction of a bailiff, at Kilbarnacle, Sandon, the inhabitants assemble in the principal streets to throw cabbage stalks at each other. The town-house bell gives signal for the affray. This is called hollow hour. Then dons, (for at least an hour) of the chief and the principal inhabitants, which have been kept by divers and like for that purpose, are worn; for not the old and pre bald, constables, &c. are attacked by the mob. In the same time, the most respectable females in the neighbourhood are invited to assist and fling apples at them on their entrance.

A house doctor had a case, which, being a bit of spirit, gave him a general acquaintance, to repose a stable on the premises of a newly hatched dentist; but the future, who is a gentleman, upon discovering the plan, drove him off. "Sir, I'm a gentleman," said the dentist.

CHARADE.—A WINE CUP.

My First was dark o'er earth and air,
As dark as she could be!
The stars that gemmed her shone but
Were only two or three;
King Cole saw twice as many they
As you or I could see.

* Army King Cole," more honest and,
* Flagons and flask are dry;
* Your nap is roughing to the shed,
* For he knows a storm is nigh."
She sat my second on his hand,
And he ate it all away.

He stood upright upon his legs—
Long life to good King Cole!
With wine and cucumber, ale and eggs,
He filled a silver bowl;
He drank of the draught to the very dregs,
And he ate of that draught my Whole.

Theodore turned M. D.—In a neighbouring county not a hundred miles ago, a shoe maker having become the father of Dr. Thomson, prevailed a book and commenced the practice of medicine. He was shortly called to visit a patient, and putting on a long face and his hook under his arm, he shuffled into the room and made the necessary communications of the sick, and then retired to the front gallery of the house to consult his medical library. Having consulted some time, he returned his head and enquired of the owner of the house, "if he had a cabbage?"—"Yes, I have a few sake cow, he could think."—"Well," said the doctor, "you must kill it, and do that, and the owner, "he must lose his cow?"—"Of all, lose your cow!" exclaimed the doctor, "do you think I care a cabbage for your cow? Let me look at your book!" The book from the doctor he read, "make a tea of the leaves of Sage Marvel" &c. instead of a Sweat Tea, he ordered Sage, to be drunk. Congress is present in the room, and the patient, in the meantime, died of Fever Gilman.—Sandon Courier.

Sometimes a Sweetness Overcomes.—"Bill, my dear, where have you been, at this time of night, to get your shirt torn and wrong side out?" "Boots, mother!—been to an opening, where a man had his pocket book; and by the by, the dozen, and stretched small from hand to hand, that's how I got my shirt torned—glad to clear out, and my hat—good gracious, and they had'nt half enough when I left 'em."

Lady Wallace and Sweet Home were partial to each other. They were crossed the Irish from Kinglaven to Leith together, when a violent storm rendered the vessel in imminent danger. Lady Wallace (faintly) and (in a tremulous voice) called her to seek consolation from her friend, who with a wary frown, answered her, "Be quiet there was great probability of the ship being lost before." "And pray, my dear friend" said Lady Wallace, "tell me, which do you think they will go first?" "Those who are in the hold," replied the hostess. "Well and wisely," said Lady Wallace, "but the question with each your lodging."

Sweet Poetry.—A correspondent at one of the watering places (says the Rhodocket Inquirer) has sent us the following, as a specimen of the immense quantity of poetry, quantity of spread immortality by the sweet of the lady's poetry and lovely. He received it from the hand of a gentleman—the sweet, doubtless, of some of [illegible]

Oh! Gin Sweet and good
Thou is by it if you would
Angine Pulmo and Peaches too
As good from so ever gone
Gulum fair as ever you saw
Yet can have cough's or take them raw

A Learned Pig.—The human has the power of [illegible] in the water to an almost incredible distance, due to pursuit of his prey, the flying fish; and the pursuit to our arrival at Mozambique, one of these fish came under our bow, passed over the mast, deck, and gunwale, and fell into the opposite side, a distance, I could judge upon land, thirteen or fifteen feet. Stunned by the violence of the contact, I left mechanism at the tobacco-box, but, upon recovering, his struggles were so great that I became necessarily to inflict repeated blows of an iron belaying pin, which, as appeared with [illegible] the present situation is estimated above the [illegible] of the water was 10 feet, and the length of the [illegible] of the [illegible] received, would have extended [illegible].—Capt. Cook's Narrative.

A quarrelsome, a short time ago, on being liberated from St. Augustine's gaol, walked into a neighbouring tobacco and asked for a pint of beer, informing the landlord, at the same time, he had no money, but that, if he would furnish the supply, he would tell him some thing greatly to his advantage. Boniface hesitated, but, seeing the man's countenance to wear an honest cast of appearance, placed before him a "tankard of ale." A few minutes elapsed, and the beer had vanished, and with it my host's patience, for he eagerly demanded the promised information. "Hark ye," replied the newly refreshed delinquent, "If you would be not out-numbered, go get on the road and, the sooner both is against the wall."—Kendall's Chron.

Dwarfs and Giants.—The celebrated Polish dwarf Bohn, who weighed only a pound at birth, and none exceeded a few years of age, when he was 20 inches in stature, attained at that period into the service of Stanislaus, king of Poland, and became that monarch's favorite. The wonderful dwarf he had attained the height of 29 inches, but he then began to pine, and died (in 1783 at twenty-two, with all the marks of premature age. Bohn's parents were of the ordinary size. They carried him to the christening on a plate, and placed him in a wooden shoe.

Borwaldski attained the height of 30 inches. He married at twenty-two, and his wife is said to have presented him with several well made and full grown children. His parents were above the ordinary size.

Dr. Hilaire, a French author, who has recently written on this subject, estimates the height of Goliath at 9 feet, and concluded, and he observes that modern giants have attained about the same altitude. The greatest average stature of any white people is said to be six feet and an inch, which is the Patagonian race. The Esquimaux and Bonthonians (an Ethiopian tribe) are six feet or 4 feet, as the minimum of the human race. Both pygmies and dwarfs are almost invariably imbecile, and die at an early age.

CHARADE.—A WINE CUP.

My First was dark o'er earth and air,
As dark as she could be!
The stars that gemmed her shone but
Were only two or three;
King Cole saw twice as many they
As you or I could see.

* Army King Cole," more honest and,
* Flagons and flask are dry;
* Your nap is roughing to the shed,
* For he knows a storm is nigh."
She sat my second on his hand,
And he ate it all away.

He stood upright upon his legs—
Long life to good King Cole!
With wine and cucumber, ale and eggs,
He filled a silver bowl;
He drank of the draught to the very dregs,
And he ate of that draught my Whole.

Theodore turned M. D.—In a neighbouring county not a hundred miles ago, a shoe maker having become the father of Dr. Thomson, prevailed a book and commenced the practice of medicine. He was shortly called to visit a patient, and putting on a long face and his hook under his arm, he shuffled into the room and made the necessary communications of the sick, and then retired to the front gallery of the house to consult his medical library. Having consulted some time, he returned his head and enquired of the owner of the house, "if he had a cabbage?"—"Yes, I have a few sake cow, he could think."—"Well," said the doctor, "you must kill it, and do that, and the owner, "he must lose his cow?"—"Of all, lose your cow!" exclaimed the doctor, "do you think I care a cabbage for your cow? Let me look at your book!" The book from the doctor he read, "make a tea of the leaves of Sage Marvel" &c. instead of a Sweat Tea, he ordered Sage, to be drunk. Congress is present in the room, and the patient, in the meantime, died of Fever Gilman.—Sandon Courier.

[illegible]

[illegible]

CHAPTER OF MISSES.

The dear little Misses we meet with in life,
What hopes and what fears they awaken;
And when a man's taking a Miss for his Wife,
He is Missed as well as Mis-take-ben.
When I courted a Miss Aid and obtained the kiss,
I thought in the warmth of my passion,
That I'd make a great Mis in thus gaining a Miss,
But 'twas only a Miss-calculation.

For me many Misses surrounded Miss Kid,
With me and my love interfering;
A jealous Miss-trust put a into her head
That she ought not to give me a hearing.
There's a certain Miss-chance that I met with one day
Almost sent my hopes to destruction,
And she left a succession of all I might say—
And all owing to one Miss-construction.

Discovered by a Miss-information I wrote,
The cause of her anger demanding;
Miss-direction prevented her getting the note,
And introduced Miss-understanding.
When to make her my wife I earnestly swore,
Miss-belief made her doubt my intention,
And I nearly got wed to Miss-fortune before
I could wean her from Miss-apprehension.

But when she no longer would yield to Miss-doubt,
Nor be led by Miss-representation,
She had with Miss-life a most serious fall out,
And to wed felt no more hesitation.
But when at the church to be married we met
Miss-judge made the Parson to tarry,
And I got so annoyed by an awkward Miss-fit,
I could not get the ring on her finger.

Having been so Miss-used, I now keep a strict watch,
The I still live in fear of Miss-carriage,
And I found, when too late, an unlucky Miss-match,
Interfered with the joys of my marriage.
Miss-rule in my dwelling put every thing wrong
The Miss-ard perpetual then to her season,
Till my case, like the time I take singing my song,
Was all wasted by Miss-application.

VARIETY OF MODES.

"In the whole course of my reading," says a celebrated writer, "which has been extensive and desultory, I do not recollect having ever met with an essay on the science of scolding; yet that it is reduced to a perfect system, and that the practice of it has long been a ruling passion with the fairer part of the creation, few seem will deny. There is as much harmony, measure, and variety speaking, in the boisterous pipes of a regular-bred, out-and-out scold, as in the astonishing exclamations of Mrs. Wood, or the melting supplications of Braham; indeed, even the most celebrated and experienced physicians assert, that it is of the most essential benefit in many cases, which I would attempt to divide into the following classes, viz.:

"First.—The constitutional scold, who practises for the benefit of her health.

"Second.—The beautiful scold, who is put out of temper, because she cannot bring her complexion to its usual pitch of perfection, even with the aid of the captivating cradle.

"Third.—The authoritative scold, who discharges her spleen to support her dignity, and will not permit the least infringement on the prerogative of the petticoat.

"Fourth.—The matrimonial scold, who reads curtain lectures for the information of her husband's morals, recommended to the very ancient and numerous family of the Ben-pecks.

"Fifth.—The dramatic scold, alias stage shrew, who endeavours to convince the world that she can rant off the stage as well as on it.

"Sixth.—The patriotic scold, who vociferates for the good of her country, to display her great knowledge and party principles.

"Seventh.—The unfeminine scold, who, by forming a cordial alliance with certain strong liquors, is wrought up to a frenzy, in which state strikingly evinces the ardent dispositions of a woman of spirit.

"Eighth.—The common scold, though last, not least in fame, who may with the utmost propriety, be styled a professional scold, possessed of a volume of voice, combining vast compass and exhausted strength especially in the quiet notes. She is so well established, and in the ancient art, mystery and province of scolding, that all others modestly submit, and have her the undisputed heroine of the field of tongue."

A Tender Boy.—In one of the wild mountain paths we suddenly fell in with a Turkish youth, about sixteen years old, mounted on a spirited Arab ass, and pouting forth a song with all the light-heartedness of a schoolboy. Upon seeing us, his hand was instantly upon his dagger; but after a moment's pause, he approached, threw himself from his horse, and addressed us with all the ease and self possession of a well bred gentleman. His dress, exterior, prepossessing; and although his legs were bare, and I can compare tanned yellow, yet the almost feminine delicacy of his complexion and the richness of his dress, induced us to suppose he was the son of some chief of consideration in the country. His curiosity was much excited when he learned we were Americans, and his questions evinced more judgment than could have been expected from one of his age. Who was our pashe, and what was our religion? what use did we make of all the opium we carried away from Turkey? and a number of other questions were uttered with the volubility of a Greek, rather than with the dull gravity with which we are accustomed to consider as characteristic of the Turk. We parted with many expressions of good will on our side, which he returned with the most graceful gestures and acknowledgments.

The Fiery Ready.—Of course, a fat, comely, cheerful looking schoolmaster, of the county Kildare, was the first relief executed for high treason. The sentence was that he should be hanged by the neck, but not till he was dead; that while he was still alive his bowels should be taken out, his body quartered, &c. The culprit bore all this with firm, though mild composure; and on the conclusion of the sentence bowed low, thanked the Judge for his impartiality, and, turning about said "Gentlemen, I'm ready!" "Do well if so am I!" "Why," said he, "I was afraid his Lordship would order me to be flayed!" Every rebel preferred death to the cat-of-nine-tails! Of honesty hand-written years on the top of Nose-gay.—Sir J. and Barrington's Personal Sketches and Memoirs.

Tender-ness.—In the direction of a bailiff, at Kilbarnacle, Sandon, the inhabitants assemble in the principal streets to throw cabbage stalks at each other. The town-house bell gives signal for the affray. This is called hollow hour. Then dons, (for at least an hour) of the chief and the principal inhabitants, which have been kept by divers and like for that purpose, are worn; for not the old and pre bald, constables, &c. are attacked by the mob. In the same time, the most respectable females in the neighbourhood are invited to assist and fling apples at them on their entrance.

A house doctor had a case, which, being a bit of spirit, gave him a general acquaintance, to repose a stable on the premises of a newly hatched dentist; but the future, who is a gentleman, upon discovering the plan, drove him off. "Sir, I'm a gentleman," said the dentist.

Cleaning the Teeth.—Tooth powder is absolutely essential to the perfect condition of the mouth, but, to be of any service, it must be used the first thing in the morning. The concretion which is deposited in the night upon the teeth, and which is the resultant of the congregated saliva, taken in the course of a few hours, and is removable by any dentrifice that would not at the same time destroy the teeth themselves. All acid preparations, such as cream of tartar, and all powders which contain of hard angular particles, and therefore not by trituration, should be avoided. On this last account, charcoal is particularly objectionable, in addition to which it lodges in the space formed by a fold of the gum and the neck of the tooth, where it presents a foul circle, destructive of that roseate hue which is so characteristic of health and beauty.—From Nichell's new work on the Teeth.

To Prepare cold Potatoes.—Some of your readers may start, and ask, "Who don't know how to warm cold potatoes?" Why a great many don't know how to do it as it should be done. In traveling I have rarely met with potatoes prepared in the following manner, and I never found any that were half so good. Taties delte I admit, but the experiment is easily made.

Slice them into a frying-pan, and over a quart of potatoes, pour half a tea-cup full of good cream (but no water,) first sprinkling on a little salt. Cover it closely and after it begins to boil, stir them a few times, till the pan is nearly dry, but not burn. Then dish them.—Genesee Farmer.

Isaac Norcross,

BOOT and Shoe Maker, No. 86 Noble street below Fourth, Philadelphia, respectfully informs his friends and the public in general, that he has commenced the above business at the Gentleman's branch only, where he hopes, by punctuality in attention, to merit a generous share of public patronage; his work shall be of the best materials and good workmanship.

N. B. Repairing done neatly, and with dispatch. may 1—tf

One Cent Reward.

RANAWAY from the subscriber, on the 20th inst. an indented servant to the Lottery Brokerage business by the name of James Leary, about 19 years of age. Whoever will return said boy to me, or give me a clue, will receive the above reward, but no charges. All persons are forbid harboring said boy or trusting his parents. WM. GAMBLE

nov 17—tf

Wanted,

TWO or three journeymen Fancy Chair-makers, to whom constant employment will be given. Apply at the N. E. corner of Sassafras Fifth and Market streets. Also, an apprentice wanted to the above business. nov 17—

Stray Horse.

CAME in the premises of the subscriber, on the 8th of November, a gray Horse, supposed to be 11 or 12 year old, with collar and rope halter on. The owner can have said horse by proving property and paying charges, or he will be sold at the law fixture. ALGERNON BANSELL,

Buckley, Pa.

Vendue.

WILL be sold, at PUBLIC VENDUE, on Thursday, 5th of December next, at the late dwelling of ELIZABETH SHARP, deceased, at Silver Run, near Millville, the usual property of said deceased, consisting of horses, cattle, and sheep, 6 heavy wagons, 1 dearborn, 1 turkey, and a variety of household and kitchen furniture.

Household and Kitchen Furniture.

1100 cords of wood, principally on the landings at Millville and Silver Run, about one-fourth of which is Oak, and the remainder Pine, Cedar and Cedar Posts, on Beckler's and Sharp's Landings.

One acre of Cedar Posts, of the one-spread term of a lease upon a tract of land called the McCready Tract, containing 400 acres, from which 100 acres of which is well timbered, situate five miles from the village of Millville.

Also, the one-spread term of a lease upon the Hollows tract of land, 3 miles from Millville, supposed to cut about one hundred cords.

Also, at the same time and place,

one half of the new Sloop GIBRALTAR, of Port Elizabeth, 75 tons burden, was launched in the fall of 1836, is well built, of first rate materials, and draws but 6 feet 1 inches loaded.

Also, one third of the Sloop SCHUYLKILL, of Port Elizabeth, 75 tons burden, five years old.

Also, the Sloop EAGLE, of Port Elizabeth, 30 tons burden, was rebuilt in 1836.

Also, the Sloop CAROLINE, of Port Elizabeth, was rebuilt in 1836.

Also, the Sloop DELAWARE, 45 tons burden, rebuilt in 1836, draught of water loaded, 6 feet.

The above vessels are well roped for the Bombaxter or Lumber trade, and are in good order; the three last described being of one-fourth or more of the above tonnage.

Persons wishing to view the above described property, can do so by calling on the premises, and shown the same by calling on Ephraim Sharp, at Silver Run.

Sale to commence at 10 o'clock, A. M., and continue from day to day until the property is all disposed of. Terms cash.

DAVID SHARP,
EPHRAIM SHARP, } Admin'rs.
JOB. BUTCHER,

nov 23—3t*

Christian Library—New Vol.

KEY & BIDDLE have commenced the second volume of that valuable and popular work, The Christian Library; comprising a series of standard Religious Literature with Critical Introductions and Prefaces, by the Rev. Thomas H. Tyng, D. D. Rector of St. Paul's Church, Philadelphia.

The first volume of the Library comprises the following interesting works:

Memoir of the Rev. Robert Hall, A. M. By Olynthus Gregory, LL. D. F. R. S. Mathematical Professor in the Royal Military Academy.

History of the Reformation in France. By the Rev. Edward Bickersteth, M. A. late Fellow of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge.

Sermons on Infidelity. The Active Christian. Scripture Principles of Education. The Lecturer. Conversations on Religion, with Lord Byron. The Valley of Humiliation. Memoir of Mrs. Hannah More.

The Life of William Cowper, Esq. compiled from his Correspondence and other authentic sources of information, interesting remarks on his writings, and on the peculiarities of his interesting character, never before published. By Thomas Wright.

The Testimony of Nature and Revelation to the Being, Perfections, and Government of God. By the Rev. Henry Grove, author of the History of the United States of America, and Determination of the War of Independence, in Loudon's Encyclopædia.

An Essay on the Spirit and Influence of the Reformation, a work which obtained the prize from the Theological Institution, founded by the national bounty of France. What has been the influence of the reformation by Luther on the political advancement of the nations of Europe, and on the diffusion of knowledge. By Charles Coquerel, some time Professor of Philosophy in the University of Montauban. Translated from the French, with a preliminary Essay, by Rev. Henry Pitman, Professor in the The logical Seminary at Princeton, N. Jersey.

Sermons of Bartholomew Dominico of Halyrstone. Faulkner's Lectures. Bickersteth's Harmony. Irving's Life of Milton. Hallowes on the Divine Purpose. Letters to Young Indians. Life of Nicholas Ferrar, and Ferrar's Letters.

History of the Civilization, and Christianization of South Africa, from its discovery by the Dutch, to the final surrender of it to the British.

The Christian Remembrancer, or Short Reflections upon the Faith, Life, and Comfort of a Real Christian. By Ambrose Serle.

Letters during a Tour through some parts of France, Savoy, Switzerland, Germany, and the Netherlands, in the Summer of 1817. By Thomas Raikes, D. D. LL. D. of Liverpool. Fragments of the Church of God in Scotland. Memoirs of Mrs. Robert Wilson Evans, Fellow of the Trinity College, Cambridge.

Historical Sketches of the Missions of the United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen. from the commencement to the year 1817. By the Rev. John H. Pratt, author of the History of the Protestant Church of the United Brethren.

nov 9—tf

Public Sale.

A VALUABLE Plantation will be exposed to public sale, on Tuesday, the 16th day of December next, at Mr. Wright's, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon. A valuable tract of land, contained or still across 80 meadow, and about one, of which about 60 are a fine meadow, and the balance in good state of cultivation, and in good fence; a thriving orchard with a variety of fruit trees thereon. The premises are another good land and improvements, with spring, hickory, white oak, birch and pine woods. Situate in Robeson's and West Penn townships, Schuylkill county, in order to view the premises, which is superior, 6 from Mr Kratz's, 3 from Tamaqua, and 9 from the Mauch Chunk, and inquire on the Little Buffalo, and road, adjoining lands of Mr. Kratz, Jacob Hermon Reber, Adam Pandel, Jacob Reber, Leon Ann wood, and others. The improvements are a well log house, partly new and partly old, with a good frame stable, suitable public business has been performed, a good barn, with outbuilding, together with other improvements, and a good spring near the house, also an inding and a cistern between the house and barn, balancing to the Little Schuylkill Company, but the privilege of using the water is excepted. A tan mill is erected thereon, in good condition, which is supposed by the Little Schuylkill, and Tamaqua, and Mauch Chunk, and Pottsville, and Port Carbon, and Pottsville, and Port Carbon, and Pottsville, and Port Carbon